Problem definition My friend's computer is not working because it gets a "Microsoft Wireless Transceiver" error. Windows cannot load the drivers because it says "All available drivers are up to date". What should I do? Here is the link to download driver list: I'm on Windows 10 Pro Version 2004 A: I've found the solution. I've just installed the drivers that I've found on the page and it's working well now. has been found that diabetic patients without CP at presentation show a very high chance of developing late recurrences. [[@ref10]] Whereas, patients with choroidal tubercle, rather than nevus, present with a poor visual prognosis. [[@ref10]] The visual outcome in all the cases was sub-optimal. Though, the vision of the six eyes presenting within 5 years of the initial diagnosis improved with improved glycemic control, the final vision was still less than 20/60. In two eyes with choroidal tubercle, the vision had reduced to perception of light due to neovascular glaucoma with the ocular hypotony. We suggest that at diagnosis, all patients should be referred for thorough evaluation to detect CP and appropriate treatment should be initiated early. The authors thank Dr. R. Kesavamoorthy, (MD, Neuro-Ophthalmology, Vellore, Tamil Nadu) for his help in reviewing the cases. Source of Support: Nil Conflict of Interest: None declared Premature adiposity rebound is a risk factor for adult onset obesity. To investigate whether premature adiposity rebound (AR) in early childhood is associated with obesity and metabolic syndrome (MetS) in adulthood. We measured body mass index (BMI) and blood pressure in a cohort of 131 women who had participated in a longitudinal study of growth and development, conducted from the age of birth to age 19. AR was defined as a BMI above the 90th percentile at age 4 years. We investigated whether BMI > or = 25 kg/m(2) at age 25 years was more prevalent among women who had experienced AR. 82157476af
